Southern World.1

John Howard Payne, the author of "Home, Sweet Home," was a warm personal friend of John Ross, who will be remembered as the celebrated chief of the Cherokees. At the time the Cherotkees were removed from their homes in Georgia to their present possessions west of the Mississippi River, Payne was spending a few weeks in Georgia with Ross, who was occupying a misearble cabin, having been foreibly ejected from his former home. A number of the prominent Cherokees were in prison, and that portion of Georgia militia, who had orders to arrest all who refused to leave the country. While Ross and Payne were seated before the fire in the hut, the door was suddenly burst open and six or eight militiamen sprang into the room. The soldiera lost no time in taking their prisoners away. Ross was permitted to ride his own horse, while Payne was mounted on one led by a soldier. As the little party left the hovel rain began falling, and continued until every man was drenched thoroughly. The journey lasted all night. Toward midnight, Payne's escort, in order to keep himself awake, began humming, "Home, home, sweet, sweet home," when Payne remarked:

"No," said the soldier. "Do you."

"No," said the soldier. "To you."

"Ye," answered Payne, "I composed it."

"The devil you did. You can tell that the service of the sold of the sold of the soldier has the soldier. To you."

"Ye," answered Payne, "I composed it."

"The devil you did. You can tell that the soldier is a supposed to the soldier has believed the soldier. Soldiers heart of the soldier has believed the soldier. Soldiers heart of the soldier has believed the soldier. Soldiers have to sold the soldier has been soldier. Soldiers have the soldier has been soldier. The you."

"No," said the soldier. "Do you."

"Ye," answered Payne, "I composed it."

"The devil you did. You can tell that the soldier is a sold to sold the soldier. Soldiers has a soldier has been soldier. Soldiers has a soldier in the soldier. Soldiers has a soldier in the soldier. Soldiers have the soldier. Soldie John Howard Payne, the author of "Home, Sweet Home," was a warm per-

"The devil you did. You can tell that to some fellows, but not to me. Look here. You made that song, you say. If you did—and I know you didn—you can say it all without stopping. It has something in it about pleasures and palaces. Now pitch in and reel it off, and if you can't I'll bounce you from your horse and lead you instead of it."

The threat was answered by Payne, who repeated the song in a slow, subdued tone, and then sang it, making the old woods ring with the tender melody and pathos of the words. It touched the heart of the rough soldier, who was not and pathos of the words. It touched the heart of the rough soldier, who was not only captivated but convinced, and who said the composer of such a song should never go to prison if he could help it. And when the party reached Milledge-ville they were, after a preliminary examination, discharged, much to their surprise. Payne insisted it was because the leader of the squad had been under the magnetic influence of Ross' conversation, and Ross insisted they had been saved from insult and imprisonment by and Ross insisted they had been saved from insult and imprisonment by the power of "Home, Sweet Home," sung as only those who feel can sing it. The friendship existing between Ross and Payne endured until the grave closed over the mortal remains of the latter.
